

January 2007—Indiana National and State Register Listings

ALLEN COUNTY

Forest Park Boulevard Historic District Fort Wayne

This district includes a locally significant collection of high-style domestic architecture from the early 20th century. Several houses were designed by prominent local architects as well as nationally recognized designers, such as Barry Byrne who designed the Franke House at 2131 Forest Park. The district is also significant as a suburban development that demonstrates the importance of private initiative in achieving the goals of park and community planning in Fort Wayne.

CLARK COUNTY

Spring Street Freight House Jeffersonville

The Spring Street Freight House retains one of the highest degrees of integrity of the remaining three rail structures in the Falls of the Ohio area. It is significant architecturally as a good example of standard rail design. It is also significant for its role in commerce and transportation in Indiana.

GREENE COUNTY

Linton Commercial Historic District Linton

Linton's commercial district is significant for its architecture, history, and association with the coal industry. As part of an effort to assist counties with little or no National Register representation, DHPA staff prepared the nomination with the encouragement of a local theater owner and other merchants. The development of Linton's coal industry spurred growth of the commercial district. It includes several structures directly connected with the industry, in addition to the federal post office and old city hall that have served the Linton community for over seventy years.

MONROE COUNTY
Hinkle-Garton Farmstead
2920 East 10th Street
Bloomington

Despite the demolition of one structure and slight changes to the State Route in front of the property, the Hinkle-Garton Farmstead is significant as one of the few remaining farms in the area. There is an architecturally interesting Queen Anne style house and a cottage among the collection of buildings on the property.

PORTER COUNTY
Martin Young House
Chesterton

Though the front porch is a later addition or alteration, the Martin Young House retains many key elements of Italianate architecture, inside and out. It was rated “outstanding” in the 1991 Porter County Interim Report, and was subsequently nominated to the registers for its architectural significance.

ST. JOSEPH COUNTY
North Liberty Park
309 North Jefferson
North Liberty

North Liberty Park represents one of the best examples of New Deal era park improvements in St. Joseph County. The park incorporates found materials, craftsmanship and park planning characteristic of WPA work in the 1930s.
